

Money Management for the Financially Ambitious

Many potential high-income earners face drastic month-to-month income fluctuations, and the typical financial education program offers little guidance for this lifestyle.

These highly compensated individuals often derive the bulk of their income from commissions, at-risk bonuses, or earnings from their own businesses. This program is for them.

Program attendees will leave with the tools to:

- Manage their household's emotions around income variation
- Prepare for life's inevitable financial "surprises"
- Maintain appropriate working capital
- Systematically handicap cash flows

Known as "Riggo" to the thousands who have laughed and learned while attending his programs, Ed Riggins has had a career that proves you can enjoy serious success without taking it all too seriously. He learned from doing stand-up comedy that if you want to find the truth, look for the funny. Before being recognized as a "Power Broker" by Costar, Riggo mowed lawns, customized cars, drove a forklift and was a small engine mechanic on his way to becoming a first-generation college graduate. He's among less than 1% of practitioners nationally to have earned both the SIOR and CCIM designations.
